

Wish it. We'll drop it — right at your door.

— THE IDEA

A wish, made into something that lands.

WishDrop names both halves of the experience: the wanting (a product on Amazon India or Flipkart, out of reach) and the arrival (it lands at a Sri Lankan doorstep, cash in hand if you like). The mark tells the same story as one continuous line.

The wave

The "W" doubles as a search — restless, looking for something not available at home.

The rise

One unbroken stroke lifts out of the wave — the order placed, now in motion across the water.

The arrow

The line resolves into a clean arrow — decisive, forward, delivered. Nothing left ambiguous.

— COLOR

A night sky, and the gold moment a wish lands.

Indigo carries the brand's weight and trust. Gold is used sparingly, only for the moment of delivery or delight — never as a background. Teal is the motion color: buttons, links, progress, water.

Indigo

Primary. Backgrounds, wordmark, trust & weight.

#0D1D41

Teal

Motion. CTAs, links, order-progress states.

#0E8C9C

Gold

Spark. Delight moments only — never fills.

#F0A93A

Parchment

Light backgrounds, breathing room.

#F8F6EC

Ink

Body text on light backgrounds.

Soft wish, solid drop — the same contrast, in type.

Fraunces carries warmth and voice: the wordmark's "ish," headlines, taglines. Space Grotesk carries clarity and confidence: the wordmark's "drop," UI, body copy, numbers. (Shown here in Liberation fallback for print reliability — use the true families in design tools.)

DISPLAY & VOICE — FRAUNCES

Wish it.

Light Medium Italic Semibold

Headlines, taglines, and the "ish" in the wordmark. Italic reserved for emotional or tagline moments only.

UI & BODY — SPACE GROTESK

Drop it.

Regular Medium Semibold Bold

The "drop" half of every lockup, all app UI, body copy, prices, order statuses, buttons. Never italicized.

— LOGO LOCKUPS

One mark, two grounds.

The teal swoosh and gold "ish" never change. Only "drop" shifts between white (on indigo) and dark indigo (on light) to stay legible.

ON LIGHT

ON INDIGO

Don't recolor the mark

Don't place on teal — it disappears

Don't squash the proportions

Warm, plain, and never overpromising.

WishDrop speaks like a trusted neighbor who happens to travel to India often — not like a logistics company, and not like a flashy startup.

Plain

Say the price in LKR, the day it arrives, and what happens next. No jargon like "fulfillment" or "consolidation" in customer-facing copy.

Warm

Talk the way you'd explain it to a friend or a parent: "your order left India yesterday," not "shipment status: in transit."

Honest

Never promise a date you might miss. If a batch is delayed, say so plainly and early — trust is the entire product.

TAGLINE FAMILY

Primary — Wish it. We'll drop it — right at your door.

Payment trust — Pay when it lands. Not before.

Pricing trust — Your wish list, priced in rupees you know.

Short form — Every wish, one drop away.

How the mark travels.

Three places the identity has to hold up: small, in transit, and in someone's social feed.

App icon

The wave alone, reversed to parchment, on the indigo tile.

Parcel label

Full lockup, COD stamp in gold — the trust cue, printed on every box.

Social avatar

The wave alone in white on indigo — consistent across every platform.

WishDrop — Wish it. We'll drop it.
